Description

A beautiful and large pair of curtains made from a remarkable antique printed cotton with a rich and decorative design, typical of the eclectic taste of the Napoleon III era. The particularly refined design consists of a repeating pattern arranged in lozenges, enclosing large stylized elements of botanical and oriental inspiration. These motifs evoke palmettes, stylized flowers, and geometric ornaments reminiscent of Ottoman or Persian-inspired textiles, very fashionable in 19th-century interiors. The whole unfolds against an elegant deep green background, highlighting a warm palette blending golden beige, coral red, powder pink, and shades of ochre. The symmetrical compositions and graphic lines give this textile a very strong decorative presence, characteristic of furnishing fabrics from the
