Description

A bronze sculpture by René Hetzel, depicting a male bust rendered in a resolutely contemporary and expressive style. The work is immediately distinguished by its fragmented treatment of the face, as if sliced into vertical layers, creating a subtle interplay between presence and disappearance. This relief construction gives the sculpture an almost kinetic dimension depending on the viewing angle, revealing alternately the lines of the face or the interstices of the material. The patina, with its deep nuances ranging from dark brown to golden highlights, enhances the volumes and accentuates the sculptural character of the piece. The contrast between the solid surfaces and the openings creates a strong visual tension, typical of contemporary artistic exploration. The bust rests on a deliberately raw,
