Description

"The Sibyls," oil on canvas, 17th century A pair of 17th-century oil paintings on canvas depicting Sibyls, works of considerable historical, artistic, and iconographic interest. Each canvas features a portrait of a female figure inspired by the famous prophetesses of antiquity, characterized by an elegant half-length composition and intense expressiveness, typical of 17th-century painting. The Sibyls, traditionally regarded as foretellers of future events, are depicted here with various iconographic attributes and a painterly rendering that highlights the study of light and attention to detail--elements characteristic of Italian figurative art during the Baroque period. Condition: The paintings are in need of restoration, with signs of aging on the painted surface; however, these do not compromise the legibility or the overall value
