Description

Description: This remarkable terracotta vase draws inspiration from the ceramic traditions of the Marajoara culture, originating from Marajó Island, Brazil. Created in the 20th century, this sculptural piece reflects the visual power of pre-Columbian art, with its assertive volumes and handcrafted appearance. The vase is distinguished by its architectural silhouette, its surface with natural tones, and its evocation of the ceremonial and decorative pottery of ancient South American cultures. Its generous dimensions give it an impressive decorative presence, making it an ideal centerpiece for an interior or covered outdoor space. A highly valuable decorative object for collectors of tribal art, ethnographically inspired design, or sculptural ceramics. Dimensions: Height: 36 cm Diameter: 30 cm
