Description

Elegant Verona bureau secrétaire dating to the mid-18th century, representative of the refined cabinetmaking production of the region. The piece features a graceful serpentine front with three rows of drawers, veneered in richly figured burl wood arranged with great craftsmanship, creating a refined decorative pattern of grain and geometric reserves. The sides are straight, following a typical Verona construction, while the movement is concentrated on the front, giving the piece elegance and visual dynamism. The fall-front opens to reveal a well-organized fitted interior with a central compartment, including small drawers and storage spaces, with the characteristic side drawers and practical writing area. Shaped base and quality construction details confirm a well-executed piece. Overall in good
