Description

Elegant biscuit porcelain sculpture depicting a young woman with a mandolin in a neoclassical style. Signed Royer, circa 1900. The figure is gracefully draped and seated, holding a mandolin at her back, expressing a refined sense of calm and poetry. The quality of the modeling is particularly noteworthy, especially in the treatment of the drapery, hair, and facial expression. This piece reflects fine French craftsmanship typical of the late 19th century. The unglazed biscuit porcelain enhances the subtle details and sculptural depth. Very good overall condition. Dimensions: Height: 44 cm Width: 14 cm (base: 10 cm)
