Description

A rare set of three Windsor armchairs known as the "Low Back" model, with armrests and a low curved back, English work from the 19th century. The seats are hewn from a single piece of solid elm, sculpted and hollowed by use, and shaped according to the anatomical form characteristic of these exceptional rustic chairs. The raw surface retains its original dry, golden patina, bearing witness to authentic wear and continuous use over nearly two centuries. The semicircular backs are composed of a bent rail in steam-curved ash, rising in a broad arch designed to embrace the back. Turned spindle supports and miniature baluster elements are joined by a pierced back splat with scroll motifs inspired by simplified Chippendale models. Each chair is flanked by two armrests descending in a gentle curve. The bases stand on four slightly splayed, turned baluster legs with multiple ring turnings. H-stretchers forming a crinoline beneath the seat ensure the rigidity of the whole, in keeping with the traditional techniques of the joiners of the Thames Valley and the workshops of Buckinghamshire. Condition: Remarkable unrestored patina. Good overall state of preservation. Wear consistent with age and use. No restoration required. A fine-quality set, with generous grain and robust construction. These chairs stand as a testament to English provincial craftsmanship and to the taste for refined vernacular furniture. Although fully functional, they display a distinct architectural elegance, emphasized by the restraint of their design and the quality of their turning.
