Description

Fragment of a fan (only the leaf remains), historiated, depicting the judgment of Paris and the rivalry between the three goddesses Athena, Hera and Aphrodite, the episode that, according to the Ancients, truly triggered the Trojan War. The subject is also inscribed on the right-hand side. Beautiful, harmonious and well-constructed composition in full view, showing the artist's talent as a colorist. Tender pinks, purples, violets, blues and greens are happily blended, with a fluid touch that adds to the grace of the representation. Missing visible in photo, old craftsmanship with parts of braid. Framed under glass and on velvet. Bumps to frame. The dimensions given are those of the fan.
