Description

Charming trompe-l'oeil liquor cellar, ingeniously concealed as a stack of bound antique books. Closed, the object presents itself as an elegant set of library volumes with richly decorated and gilded backs, evoking precious antique works. One of the volumes opens to reveal a compartmentalized, upholstered interior case designed to hold several liqueur glasses. This type of realization testifies to the XIXe century taste for ingenious objects and cabinet curios, blending decorative refinement and a spirit of concealment. The interior contains a series of crystal glasses signed by the prestigious Baccarat house, renowned for the purity and elegance of its crystal. The set presents a very fine state of preservation: the leather case retains a beautiful patina of use, and the glasses are in perfect
