Description

Oil on oak wood from the 16th century Flemish school depicting the betrayal of Judas for 30 pieces of silver. This scene illustrates the biblical episode of the betrayal of Judas Iscariot, who delivers Jesus Christ in exchange for thirty pieces of silver. The composition highlights the moment of the transaction: Judas, identifiable by his gesture and attention to the purse, receives his reward as several figures look on. The pictorial layer shows some minor overpainting as well as wear consistent with the wear of time. The wooden panel is made up of two wooden planks with a thinning around the edges that could lead us to believe that this painting was embedded in woodwork or a furniture panel.
