Description

A superb and imposing 19th-century blown-glass apothecary bottle, resting on a wide circular base. Its generous body and tapered neck, which ends in a flared rim, give it a particularly balanced and elegant silhouette. The perfectly transparent glass exhibits slight irregularities and a few micro-bubbles, characteristic of traditional rod-blown glassmaking. The base retains a clearly visible pontil mark, a sign of authenticity. Inside, there is a light, aged deposit with golden highlights, evidence of its use in a pharmacy or herbalist's shop, lending it a beautiful patina. A piece with character, as decorative as it is authentic, ideal for a display case, bookshelf, or cabinet of curiosities. o Height: 44 cm o Diameter: approx. 25 cm o Weight: approx. 4 kg Very good overall condition.
