The central area of the painting is occupied by a group of chalets with steeply pitched roofs, also covered in snow. The buildings, gathered into a small cluster, appear nestled in a valley, with a faint trace of smoke indicating human presence.

The light-colored surfaces of the snow reflect the sunset light, taking on orange, pink, and violet hues.

In the background, a succession of mountain ridges unfolds, rendered through soft tonal areas and layered colors that gradually fade toward the horizon. The sky, broad and dominant, shows a diffuse sunset, with brushstrokes suggesting a low, glowing light beyond the mountain line.

The painting is set in a wide gilded frame, decorated with an incised pattern of small lozenges. The artist's signature is visible on the front, in the lower right corner.

Also available with an antique fir wood frame measuring 7 cm (2.76 in).
