Description

Cerused wood console produced in the 20th century, designed to extend into a dining table.

The piece features a rectangular structure resting on slightly tapered legs. The top extends through a built-in mechanism allowing the console to transform from a wall piece into a dining table.

The cerused finish highlights the natural grain of the wood, creating a subtle contrast between the darker veins and the lighter surface.

With its functional design, the piece reflects the search for adaptable furniture solutions intended to optimize interior space while maintaining a restrained aesthetic.
