Description

Elegant winter landscape depicting a river meandering through undergrowth, located in the Salisbury region of England. Rendered in oil on isorel panel, this work is distinguished by a free, controlled brushstroke and a subtle palette of cool tones. The treatment of the trees and the delicate reflections in the water lend the composition a peaceful and deeply poetic atmosphere, characteristic of mid-twentieth-century English landscape painting. The painting is signed lower right G.J. Carruthers and dated corresponding to the year 1964. It also bears on the reverse an original handwritten label mentioning: "Winter Scene near Salisbury", as well as the artist's name and address (Mrs G.J. Carruthers, Salisbury), constituting a particularly interesting provenance element. This work is part of an active British artistic environment in the Salisbury area at this time. In particular, the name Carruthers can be linked to Gabriel Joan Carruthers, an artist who exhibited at the Royal Academy and was active in the same region, although the formal attribution cannot be asserted with certainty. Presented in an understated wooden frame, this painting offers an elegant, timeless decorative presence, ideal for a classic interior or country home. Era:
