In this watercolor, Marcel Blairat captures a suspended moment at the water's edge. A mosque with simple lines stands out in a warm, slightly veiled light, while the calm of the sea reflects the colors of the landscape. A solitary silhouette near the shoreline, reinforces the impression of tranquility and intimacy. The work invites between oriental architecture and the poetry of everyday life. Marcel Blairat is sometimes inspired by landscapes, but above all by those of Upper Egypt, where he spent some time. He made his debut at the Paris Salon in 1877 and participated in Parisian exhibitions, where he exhibited his orientalist watercolours. Galerie
