Description

The signature, identified on the support surface of the lady's left arm, allows for the first time to discover and attribute the work to the artist Rosa Ceroni, a work that had previously been undocumented. The painting depicts a lady richly coiffed and sumptuously dressed according to the French fashion of the period. What is unique about her is her pose, suspended between movement and stillness, as if caught in a state of agitation, a condition that prevents her from assuming an elegant facial expression; instead, her face is marked by a slight grimace. The atmosphere is somber, combined with the absence of references to furnishings or other interior elements.
