Description

This elegant polychrome terracotta sculptural group depicting the Madonna and Child, dating from the late 15th or early 16th century, originates from Central Italy. The work is distinguished by the sweetness of the faces and the naturalness of the composition: the Virgin, wrapped in a large cloak with delicate chromatic reflections, holds the Child seated on her lap in an intimate, maternal gesture. The modeling reveals an expert hand, capable of combining formal balance and expressive intensity, while traces of the original polychrome--still visible in the warm flesh tones and the refined details of the drapery--lend the sculpture an authentic and deeply evocative charm. The surface features a patina consistent with its age, with signs of wear and slight gaps that attest to its history and
