landscape more authentically rural than that of his contemporaries: his compositions, though rooted in the rococò tradition, are imbued with a different sense of realism, achieved through the use of deeper, earthier tonalities and a rich, impasted application of paint. The painting, firmly attributed to the hand of Giuseppe Zais, depicts a river landscape animated by a group of figures in the foreground: two women seated on the bank and a third standing with a basket, while in the background cattle drink from the stream, led by a herdsman. The composition closes to the right with a medieval village of rural buildings, a bell tower and architectural ruins set within autumnal foliage, rendered with the loose, earthy brushwork characteristic of the artist's mature period.
