152, Boulevard Haussmann in Paris and Galerie Simonson[]. Among his best-known works are the portraits of Maréchal Foch painted in 1921, exhibited at the Palais du Luxembourg, that of General Gouraud, as well as those of stars of the chanson of the period such as Tino Rossi, whose portrait he exhibited in 1937 and that of Jeanne Aubert in 1939. He again participated in the Salon des Artistes Français on May 17, 1940. It's probably following the promulgation of the Vichy regime's discriminatory statute against Jews that we lose track of him that year, and find one of his works signed under the name Jack Weiz, "jeune femme au lever à la lueur de la bougie". He was a long-time resident of 11, boulevard Pereire in the 17th arrondissement of Paris. Original gilded stucco frame
