

Medieval Wrought Iron Belt Buckle Element - 14th Century

280 EUR

Period : Before 16th century

Condition : Bon état

Material : Wrought iron

Width : 7,3 cm

Height : 7 cm

Description

It features a decoration composed of two protrusions that may be likened to so-called "kidney" forms. These recall daggers bearing the same name, a symbol of masculine exuberance. The passage of time has given the iron a surface reminiscent of bone. This buckle comes from an important French collection of buckles and retains old collection labels. Comparable "kidney"-shaped daggers are preserved in the collections of the Musée de l'Armée. Very good overall condition, with wear consistent with use and light surface oxidation. Dimensions: Height: 7 cm Width: 7.3 cm Thickness: 0.4 cm Germany/France, 14th century Please contact the gallery for any further information.
