Description

This remarkable tripod guéridon in brass and eglomise mirror is a highly representative creation by Maison Jansen from the 1940s, a period when the famous Parisian firm excelled in reinterpreting neoclassical furniture. The structure displays Jansen's characteristic motifs: a central tapered baluster shaft, an elegant tripod base ending in scrolled feet, and a top enclosed by a fine pierced brass gallery. The eglomise glass plate (oxidized mirror), with its deep marbled and silver reflections, elevates the piece by creating a perfect balance between the rigor of the metal and the preciousness of the antique mirror.Founded in Paris in 1880, Maison Jansen remained the absolute benchmark for international interior decoration for nearly a century. Under the leadership of Stéphane Boudin in the mid-20th
