Description

This Conté pencil portrait, executed in 1974, belongs to a particularly accomplished period in Claudio Bravo's graphic work. The artist employs one of his most characteristic devices: a subtle contrast between the highly resolved, almost painterly treatment of the face and the more freely sketched rendering of the figure and drapery. This interplay between finish and openness gives the work a distinctive presence and a striking modernity. The sitter's calm, introspective gaze immediately engages the viewer, while the pared-down composition -- allowing the paper to breathe -- enhances the work's visual impact even at a distance. A fine example of Bravo's exploration of the human figure in the 1970s, the drawing demonstrates his exceptional command of draftsmanship and
