Thanks to this bistro owner Thanks to this bistro owner, his numerous regulars could no doubt afford bread at the end of the month, when the paycheck ran short... There were fortysavers, not the thieves of Ali Baba, but simple miners or metalworkers who They were not Ali Baba's thieves, but simple miners or metalworkers who came in after a shower to get drunk from day to day. They would binge on the stench of bad beer until they no longer knew their way around their coronas. There was the repression of drunkenness which yellowed in a frame, but it was there, together, that their misery had to be forgotten. Once a month, the tavern-keeper opened the guillotine of
