Description

pair of large, highly decorative, glazed ceramic Fô dogs, China mid-20th century, excellent condition. These Fô dogs (or guardian lions) are traditional protective figures in Chinese culture, dating back centuries. Made in ceramic with a distinctive sancai (three-color) glaze using shades of green, blue and cream, these guardians were placed in pairs at the entrances to temples, palaces and homes to ward off malevolent spirits. The technique of sancai glazing reached its peak during the Tang dynasty, but remained popular until the early 20th century.These figurines are particularly prized by Asian art collectors, lovers of ancient ceramics and interior decorators looking for authentic pieces charged with symbolism. Their presence adds a touch of oriental elegance and symbolic protection to any
