Description

Elegant portrait of a man of status from the first part of the 19th century, this painting on wood panel is very expressive and certainly faithful to the character; From the Louis Philippe period, we can tell from his bearing that he is a notable, a serious man, with well-detailed facial features, he poses with a direct gaze and we can guess that he is a man at ease with himself, a small portrait not devoid of interest in good condition, in its original frame with wide cornice and gilded wood beaded frame. This piece is in very good condition and could be suitable for a portrait gallery, making it a fine collector's item.
