Description

Exceptional and Very Rare Pair of Mid 18th-Century George III Period Flamed Mahogany Tray-Top Bedside Commodes. An exceptional and very rare matching pair of mid 18th century George III, Chippendale period flamed mahogany tray-top bedside commodes. It is extremely uncommon to find an original pair of bedside cabinet commodes from this period, making these pieces particularly desirable for collectors and interior designers alike. Each commode features a finely pierced galleried tray top with carrying handles above a single drawer, beautifully figured mahogany cupboard doors and canted corners. Below sits a retractable lower section with its leather cover, a finely fret cut apron and an elegant brass swan neck handle, all raised on square moulded legs. These cabinets are in good original condition and display the superb craftsmanship and refined proportions typical of the George III period. The richly figured flamed mahogany has developed a deep, warm patina over time, enhancing the depth and character of the timber. This colour and surface are exactly what are most sought after by discerning collectors and decorators. Combining elegance, functionality and historical importance, this rare pair of 18th-century bedside commodes will make a striking focal point in any refined interior, from a classic English country house setting to a sophisticated contemporary bedroom. Sturdy, strong and ready for everyday use, they offer both decorative presence and practical versatility.
