Description

Elegant display easel in walnut wood, dating from the late 19th to early 20th century, featuring a sober and well-balanced design typical of atelier or shop furnishings. The piece stands out for its warm and natural patina, well preserved, and for its solid craftsmanship. It includes refined metal decorative details that enhance its overall appearance without overwhelming its clean lines. The structure is height adjustable through a system of holes with a screw locking mechanism, a practical and sturdy solution that allows the easel to accommodate different types of artworks. The base is particularly interesting, designed as an opening compartment. Through an access point, the entire structure can be dismantled, making the easel easy to transport, a feature typical of professional-use furnishings. A
