Description

Oil on canvas. Original canvas. Signed and dated by hand.Like Schubert's Lied, where dogs bark to warn that men, lying in bed, are dreaming of what they lack, the painting suggests this same boundary between domestic reality and wandering aspiration. It represents refuge, the stability of the home and the placidity of the sleeping world, while the link with Schubert's work reminds us that, behind these illuminated windows, the eternal contrast pulsates between the repose of the sedentary and the wandering destiny of those who observe the scene from afar. It's a tribute to rural peace, but imbued with the melancholy of the exile contemplating an everyday paradise to which, like the protagonist of the winter cycle, he knows he doesn't belong.Image dimensions unframed: 64 x 53 cm /
