The four legs are slender, tapered and gently curved outward, in keeping with a typology commonly found in 19th-century Alpine furniture, characterized by formal restraint and solid construction. The drawer is fitted with a small central metal knob; the interior, left unfinished, reveals the light natural tone of the fir wood.
The exterior surface is finished with an anthracite grey lacquer, likely applied at a later date, now showing abrasions, losses and signs of wear that allow the underlying wood to emerge. This irregular patina provides a layered reading of the object, highlighting the relationship between the original wooden structure and subsequent interventions. The compact dimensions and the presence of a drawer suggest its use as a side table or small occasional piece of furniture.
Interventions carried out on all our furniture:
Structural restoration: reconstruction of small missing parts, filling of any cracks in the back panel, consolidation of weakened areas, inspection and repair of hardware.
Thorough anti-woodworm treatment.
Cleaning and sanitization of interior surfaces.
Exterior finish with natural beeswax.
Interior finish with shellac, a natural alcohol-based varnish.
