Description

This 18th-century tempera painting on canvas, attributed to the Venetian school, features the characteristic curved format typical of decorative overdoor panels. The architectural composition depicts a rural landscape enhanced by an ancient tower and a single-arched bridge, beneath which flows a waterfall rendered with vibrant brushstrokes. The foreground is enlivened by figures of travelers and a hunter with a dog, rendered with concise, rapid brushstrokes. The work, measuring 108x107 cm, retains its contemporary shaped and gilded frame. Painting from a private Venetian family collection
