Description

This bench, a prime example of post-World War II Italian modern design, is characterized by clean lines that combine formal elegance with structural functionality. Crafted from wood, it features an extremely slender silhouette: the long rectangular seat is supported by a rhythmic sequence of tapered legs, connected by a continuous crossbar that visually lightens the structure while ensuring great stability. The clean, architectural design evokes the design language of mid-century productions from the 1950s and 1960s, where proportion, lightness, and build quality are central elements. The warm patina of the wood and the clean lines give the piece a refined and contemporary character, easily integrating into modern or mid-century interiors. Period: 1950s Condition: excellent Origin:
