Description

JAEGER LECOULTRE watch from the "Club" line, emblematic of the 1970s, a period during which the house explored more modern, assertive forms. Breaking away from its refined classicism, Jaeger LeCoultre stands out here with an extremely studied and worked design. This model is immediately distinguished by its cushion-shaped case, with broad, balanced lines typical of the design of this period. Its brushed finish gives it a sober, contemporary, almost architectural presence. One of the most remarkable elements lies in its thick, subtly faceted glass, which catches the light and enlivens the dial depending on the viewing angles. This play of reflections lends the watch an almost jewel-like dimension, reinforcing its singular aesthetic character. The dial, silver-tinted with a subtle sunray finish, is embellished with applied hour markers and a precise railway track, offering excellent legibility. The day and date display at 3 o'clock harmoniously completes the ensemble, recalling the practical vocation of this model. Powered by a reliable automatic movement, this watch has been designed for everyday use, combining comfort and robustness. More than a complication watch, this model embodies a stylistic approach specific to the 1970s, where formal research and work on volumes take precedence, while retaining the signature of a great watchmaking house. The watch is duly signed. In perfect condition, we guarantee its good working order for one year (except in the event of shock or immersion). The case shows micro-scratches corresponding to a state of use.
