Description

Chinese porcelain vase oxblood red shuang xi double happiness late 19th Created for love, the union of two beings, this bottle vase in the style known as "shuang xi" (double happiness) comes from Chinese ceramic craftsmanship in the late 19th century, during the late Qing period. It is traversed by a red enamel known as "Oxblood". A skilful blend of cherry red and iridescent blood red, imitating hemoglobin, both visually beautiful and poetic, it perfectly symbolizes what it's meant to be: a wedding gift. The union of two beings, and the bonds of blood, is all poetry in this vase, which will soon continue to surprise, through its history as well as its aesthetics, ideal in an Asian porcelain collection, perfect for holding your most beautiful bouquets! Fast & careful shipping to France, Europe & worldwide. Dimensions->
