Description

These objects are a pair of processional lanterns (or torches) of Tuscan origin, dating from the late 18th to early 19th century. They were traditionally used during religious ceremonies, supported by long wooden or metal poles, and could hold candles or small oil lamps. Materials: They are typically made of sheet metal or wrought iron, decorated with gilded and lacquered metal elements. Style: They feature rich decoration with plant motifs and leaf scrolls and are topped with small pinnacles. The central structure is polygonal, with glass panels to protect the flame. One of them is shorter; the pole has been shortened. In very good condition, with a few missing glass panes; from an old Tuscan residence. Dimensions: one is 253 cm tall, the other 233 cm tall; lantern dimensions without
