Description

This bracelet is composed of ten beads, eight of agate in various colors and two of blood jasper. The beads are mounted rosary-style on a gilded metal wire and each is framed by two filigree cupules that appear to be vermeil (impossible to test). The voluminous heart-shaped ratchet clasp is metal with a thick layer of gilding. Suspended from the tip of the heart clasp is a tassel consisting of a larger zoned agate bead framed by two vermeil filigree cupules that carries at the end of chainlets two small carnelian beads and a carnelian heart beneath another zoned agate bead. The tassel cupules are in gilded metal. This is a charming, colorful piece of jewelry with sentimental connotations typical of the 1840s during the reign of Louis-Philippe.
