Description

Small gilded bronze clock depicting a Pulcinella on a white marble base, with a cock-crowing mechanism, dating from the LXVI/Directoire period (late 18th century). The marble base is probably not original and the back glass is missing. There is a chip on the dial, minor wear to the gilding and a few stains on the marble base (visible on the photos). It does not work: the movement is complete but will need servicing..
