Description

1815-1830 French Opaline glass Tazza with a gilt bronze mount that is delicately sculpted with doves sculptures . The gilt bronze border is adorned with a finely chiseled decoration of flowers. Handles decorated with dove patterns resting on curved branches drinking water. This motif is inspired by an ancient motif discovered in Tivoli and mentioned by Pliny. Circa, From the end of the 18th century, France began to produce a colored crystal or opaline. Many objects are produced, the first forms of which are strongly inspired by Antiquity. But it was during the French Restauration that colors such as "pigeon's throat, milky white or turquoise ..." appeared made possible by the addition of gold salts. Thus, famous manufactures such as those of Creusot, Baccarat or Saint-Louis became the main
