Description

Oil on canvas mounted on panelDimensions : 27 x 36 cmExpertise : cabinet TurquinCharming 17th century Dutch genre scene depicting a group of peasants and drinkers gathered in a dark interior around a game of cards and pipes. In a smoky atmosphere lit by the embers of the hearth, the characters are captured with remarkable liveliness of expression: knowing glances, laughter, spontaneous gestures and popular attitudes convey all the narrative verve typical of Dutch genre painting.The work is fully in keeping with the tradition of tavern scenes developed in the United Provinces in the 17th century, in the wake of Adriaen Brouwer and Adriaen van Ostade. `Egbert van Heemskerck specialized precisely in these compositions of cabarets and lively popular interiors, appreciated for their picturesque and moralistic character. His works met with great success in England, where he settled from the 1670s onwards.The composition displays a fine mastery of chiaroscuro effects: the warm light coming from the fireplace and the lit pipes subtly models the faces and accentuates the intimate atmosphere of the scene. The treatment of the figures, expressive and caricatured, is characteristic of the painter.The work bears several old inscriptions on the reverse, as well as a handwritten label from the early 20th century mentioning the attribution to "Sébastien Heemskerck", an interesting testimony to its collecting history.Canvas formerly marouflaged on panel.Very fine end of 18th-century frame, sold separately for EUR900.Works by Egbert van Heemskerck are now held in several prestigious public collections, including - the Rijksmuseum, - the Dulwich Picture Gallery, - the Philadelphia Museum of Art, - the Museum of Fine Arts Boston - the National Trust.
