Description

Oil on canvas. The painting closely replicates the one created by Carlo Cignani in 1702/1704, and is therefore the work of one of his students or at least from his workshop or circle. The scene depicts the infant Jupiter being suckled by the goat Amalthea, surrounded by nymphs and fauns intent on making music. According to myth, his mother Rhea, to save the child from his father Saturn, who devoured his children, hid him on the island of Crete, where he was raised by forest nymphs. The painting has undergone restoration and relining. It is presented in an antique gilded wooden frame. The item is in good condition, with minor signs of wear. We try to present the item's actual condition as accurately as possible with the photos. If any details are unclear from the photos, the description will apply.
