Description

Late 19th-century wrought-iron kitchen server with circular structure and twisted rods. It is presented suspended and trimmed with a set of antique brass and bronze oil lamps and accessories, forming a decorative composition in the spirit of the interiors of yesteryear. Designed to be suspended near the hearth, this type of server accommodated utensils and lighting-related elements. The association with these oil lamps today underlines its evocative character and makes it a presentation piece. The wrought iron, formerly oxidized, has been cleaned and then protected by oiling. The brass and bronze elements have been cleaned and waxed. The brass and bronze elements have been cleaned and waxed. The whole retains a patina of use consistent with its period. Can be used as a
