Description

Pen and ink drawing on paper depicting a soldier in profile wearing a bicorne. Signed "Naudin" in the lower right-hand corner. Bernard Naudin (1876-1946) was a French painter, draftsman, engraver and caricaturist who, after receiving initial artistic training from his father, entered Léon Bonnat's studio at the Beaux-Arts in Paris in 1897. He began by exhibiting military paintings at the Salon des Indépendants, before specializing in drawing and etching. He contributed to the magazines Le Cri de Paris and L'Assiette au beurre, and illustrated numerous books. His favorite themes were the underprivileged, rural life, the circus world, music, etc. In 1912, he held his first solo exhibition at the Pavillon de Marsan. During the First World War, when he was mobilized as an infantry sergeant, he produced
