Description

A refined and expressive example of early 20th-century Dutch design, this side table or small cabinet by the Amsterdam School embodies the movement's characteristic blend of architectural rigor, craftsmanship and decorative detail. Made around 1915, it features the assertive geometric lines and sculptural presence that defined the style, while retaining a warm atmosphere thanks to the careful finish of its wood. The hinged top opens onto a compartmentalized interior: an elegant and practical feature that testifies to the era's fascination with ingenious storage solutions and refined assemblies. Underneath, a drawer and lower shelf structure and optimize space, making this piece ideal as a side table, bedside table or occasional storage unit. Brass hardware and a subtle interplay of vertical and horizontal lines contribute to its distinctive Amsterdam School character. With its harmonious proportions, handcrafted details and discreet architectural presence, this cabinet exemplifies the movement's ambition to sublimate everyday objects into works of art. A rare, atmospheric piece that integrates early twentieth-century Dutch design into contemporary interiors with ease and authenticity.
