ivory and black, creating contrasts while separating the motifs. The thickness of this carpet is 5 mm, making it a supple piece, but whose hold on the ground is stiffened by the density of the knots. This natural silk on fine cotton rug, hand-knotted around 1970, is in superb condition. The Srinagar region of Kashmir is where these marvels are and were produced, silk on silk or silk on cotton. Srinagar, the Venice of India, its garden-decorated carpets, like the gardens of Shalimar, its papier-mâché, and its colorful culture. India, and especially the Kashmir region, is not a wool-producing country, hence the limited use of this material. The wool used in India comes almost exclusively from imports. The pieces originating from Kashmir are of impeccable quality, knotted with first-rate materials as beautiful as those from Iran, and have been competing with them for many, many decades.
