Description

Decorative leather sculpture in the form of a kangaroo, designed as a magazine holder. This iconic model stands out for its stylised lines and its playful yet functional character. Entirely crafted in stitched and padded leather, the piece displays a rich, warm brown patina, beautifully developed over time. The pouch naturally serves as a storage compartment for magazines or newspapers, turning an animal form into an elegant and practical object. Height: 83 cm Good overall condition. Please note: some weakness to one leg, and a small hole at the tip of the tail.

Gallery view Dimitri Omersa's leather animals have become iconic examples of mid-20th century British design, sitting at the crossroads between decorative object and functional furniture. Their appeal lies in the balance between simplicity of form, quality of craftsmanship, and a quietly expressive presence. This kangaroo, with its generous scale and beautifully aged patina, perfectly embodies this approach. Both sculptural and practical, it brings warmth and character to an interior. A distinctive and enduring design piece.
