made of yellow copper. The front is decorated with a flaming grenade topped by a medusa mask and a laurel wreath. The sides are decorated with gadroons, acanthus leaves and palmettes. It is topped with a stylized copper aigrette holder and an aigrette of scarlet horsehair. The helmet also features its original black-tinted sealskin headband, which has retained most of its hair (85%). Model 1845 chinstraps, with small rings mounted on black leather chinstraps. They are complete with their rosettes adorned with a radiant sun. Long mane of black horsehair about 88 cm for the visible part. The helmet's interior is original, complete, and exceptionally well-preserved. It consists of a black leather liner and two leather strips covering the visor and the neck cover. Beautiful and rare period plume with its wool olive, the whole in scarlet. Superb collector's item in very good overall condition with no oxidation. A small dent to the rear of the skull and discreet cracks to the crest. Wear of time to the headband and liner. Partial cut at the jugular chinstrap. The mane is an old one but has probably been changed. Plume holder replaced with a 1872/74 model. Height of helmet -- without mane and without plume: 37 cm. 2/ A steel cuirass model 1855 in very good condition, with matching number. This type of cuirass was worn by French cuirassier regiments during the Second Empire and the Third Republic - until 1914. It consists of a breastplate and a backplate made of steel. Both bear the same serial number "3067". Manufactured by the Châtellerault factory in 1876. Same size and width. The shoulder straps are made on brass and are mounted on leather. At the rear, the shoulder straps are attached to the backplate with two brass plates. At the front, they lock onto the breastplate with two rectangular brass locks. Regulatory modification in 1891, essentially bringing the two shoulder straps closer to the central busk of the breastplate to enable a rifle to be shouldered more easily. All leathers, including the belt, are original and in very good condition. Very good condition overall with some trace of old oxidation. Height of breastplate: 45 cm This set is sold with its certificate of authenticity.
