Description

Very beautiful autochrome of Pink Flamingo flowers in a vase circa 1920. Format 9x 12 cm The flower called "pink flamingo" is actually Anthurium andraeanum, highly prized for its heart-shaped flowers, often pink, red or white. It is native to tropical rainforests. Autochrome is particularly interesting for a floral subject because it captures the delicacy and variety of flower colors, with a unique, almost painterly rendering, reminiscent of Impressionist painting. "It's not a snapshot, but the reproduction of a frozen and composed moment, illuminated by an impression, a sensation of color generated by multiple touches of pigment shaped by the brush of light" Institut Lumière. link to <https://www.lavalisearlesienne.com/product-page/autochrome-bouquet-de-fleurs-de-flamant-rose-c>
