Description

Superb Sinanli Cuval from Malatya in southeastern Anatolia. Cuval are large carrying pouches used by nomadic populations to store grain and transport it during migratory phases. Each of these objects bears the distinctive signs of its owner, directly linked to its geographical origin. Woven wool on wool. Each of these objects bears the distinctive signs of its owner, directly linked to its geographical origin. Woven wool on wool. The weaving is a pure marvel, on a par with the aesthetic aspect. Extremely fine, precise and regular, the piece is both supple and light. Yet it remains extremely robust. Composed exclusively of vegetable dyes, the perfect harmony is amplified by the use of white cotton to reveal the contrasts. As part of the great family of everyday objects, the Cuvals are among the
