Description

In this large oil on canvas dated 1896, Lucie Gourdon deploys all the delicacy of her naturalist eye, orchestrating a scene of undergrowth where light filters softly through the tall foliage. The path opens like an invitation to reverie, guiding the eye to a luminous field where nature seems to breathe in deep calm. The trees, with their slender, slightly curved trunks, compose an almost theatrical plant architecture, while the female figure advancing along the path brings a discreet, human and poetic presence, accentuating the narrative depth of the landscape. The palette, subtly modulated with warm greens, ochres and browns, reveals the artist's mastery of rendering woodland atmospheres and light transitions. Each touch, precise and sensitive, bears witness to the heritage of the French landscape tradition of the late XIXe century, in a vein close to Barbizon but imbued with a personal gentleness. The whole exudes a rare harmony, where nature becomes a refuge, a living scene and a space for contemplation. This work, set off by a richly carved gilded and silvered wooden frame, embodies one of the finest aspects of Lucie Gourdon's work: attentive, serene and deeply poetic painting, capable of capturing the fragile moment when light transforms landscape into emotion. Lucie Gourdon was a French landscape painter active in the late XIXe century, known for her naturalistic landscapes imbued with calm and poetry. The wife of René Gourdon, who exhibited at the Paris Salon between 1880 and 1896, she favored ponds, undergrowth and soft lights reminiscent of the Barbizon aesthetic. Although her biography remains poorly documented, her work testifies to a fine sensitivity and a solid mastery of the French landscape of her time. Epoque : Fin XIXe Beautiful overall condition Delivery possible in France and internationally on quotation.
