space reserved for prayer is possible, its condition shows us that it was present in a place of passage, even if these colors have remained very fresh. But this type of carpet was intended for the Moroccan aristocracy and Haute Bourgeoisie, and used designs common to the Oriental sphere at the time, mixing both Ottoman-inspired motifs and those of so-called southern Iranian tribal carpets and therefore Persian-inspired. Its rare dimensions suggest that this rug would be best placed in a palace or mosque.

Collection status: As a collector of antique Moroccan rugs myself, I feel that this piece, impressive for the freshness of its colors and the abundance of motifs, offers us a decoration of flowers, roses, tulips, apple trees. The shades are brilliant and the condition can be considered very good, depending on the age of the piece. This type of carpet was destined for the Moroccan aristocracy and Haute Bourgeoisie. These carpets used designs common to the Oriental sphere at the time, blending both Ottoman-inspired motifs and those of carpets from the so-called tribes of southern Iran and therefore of Persian inspiration. Its large size would suggest that this rug would be found in a palace or mosque. Very good condition.

#Urban art is based on symmetrical geometries that give rise to infinitely repeating forms. They generally take the form of medallions whose center evokes "Al Kaaba" (the Prophet's tomb). The lines on a carpet, for example, suggest the ebb and flow of Muslims engaging in orderly, rhythmic processions invoking God. Floral motifs, leaves, plants remind Muslims of the life promised in paradise after death. These various decorative elements emerge from Islamic art and beautifully enliven the surface of Moroccan carpets. This carpet art was and is mainly practiced by Berber craftsmen.
