Description

Egyptian glass flask - Fayoum, Ve-VIIe century - funerary archaeology, Diatkine collection
Rare Egyptian glass flask from the Fayoum region, dated to the Ve-VIIe centuries CE. Fine in size and elegant in silhouette, this object was most likely intended to contain perfumed oils used in a funerary context. Such flasks were in fact deposited in tombs, accompanying the deceased on their journey to the afterlife. Made of green glass, the bottle features a well-marked pouring spout and a long, slender neck. The latter is encircled by a glass filé, making it easier to grip, especially with oil-coated hands. The globular base is slightly recessed. Comparable examples are preserved in the collections of the University of Michigan (references available on the last photograph). Dimensions: height 12.6 cm.
